

ABSTRACT

[0410] A method of encoding a set of data representing physical quantities includes forming a path between the samples of the set, the path passing a maximum of once via each sample location. For two given successive sample locations of the path, the method includes the step of forming a vector between the two sample locations, only taking into account the intermediate sample locations not already encoded by a vector.